THE GAME OF NEWPORT.

THE SEASIDE RESORT A GENERATION AGO AND NOW.

The Old Show More Moderate, Because Money Was Not So Plentiful-But the Same Old Gossips Yet Abide-The Coach Parade the Chief Attraction.

There is nothing more delightful than the gravity with which the game of Newport is played. To assist at one of the solemn "func-tions" like a coach parade is not unlike attendance upon a function of the ancient church in Rome. On a true Newport afternoon, as soft and sweet and luminous an air as can be breathed, Newport, in every kind of stately and comfortable and light and graceful carriage, with the Cost horses and the most leftily disdninful of coachmen, proceeds down the avenue to behold the state ly procession along the ocean drive.

Of its kind, there is no more beautiful drive in the world. The shore winds among rocks which are massed, a shrowd eyed trav eler said, as on the shores of Greece. The bold character of the coast of Rhode Island and its picturesque effects are wholly un known upon its neighbor, Long Island. The endless reach of sand and the monotony of the vast level land on Long Island have a certain vague charm as of a seashore becom-ing or about to become picturesque. But that point is fully reached by its northern neighbors of the New England coast, and the can drive in Newport is in itself incompar-

WHERE MONEY PLAYS. For its company on the day of a great so cial function it is quite as incomparable. Hyde park, the Bois, the Cascine, the Prater. show no such sumptuous display. If the street boy were a philosopher, he would say, probably, as he watched the spectacle, "My eyes! money plays here for all it is worth." The American street boy of every degree is not supposed to need any stronger impression of the value of money than he already pos sesses. But Newport is the great school for that instruction, and it is open free to the whole world. Money elsewhere has the same instincts and desires. But in a city, in win-ter, its sports and effects, however splendid, are divided and hidden. In summer Newport they are concentrated under most fortunate conditions, and proceed in the open air.

It is all the more striking because money has built its summer city close by and just above one of the oldest and most historic of our cities. It has improvised its magnificence and mad profusion upon the outskirts of simplicity and moderation. But that simplicity and moderation are observant, for all their plainness. When they were asked what effect the new town produced upon the old, whether the rollicking city on the hill harmed or helped the plodding seaport, they answered: "Until Crossus and Midas came it was bene-The following transfers of real estate ficial. But they have ruined Newport."

Perhaps not, however. The Newport on the hill of today is the legitimate offspring of the earlier summer retreat. That was a group of the select who came to Newport to enjoy themselves for the summer. They were well to do, some of them. But not many dwelt in cottages. The multitude lived in hotels. They danced, they dined, they drove, they sauntered. It was the green tree. It was less money enjoying itself as more money en-joys itself now. The gossip, the flirting, the display were not of another kind, they were the same as today, but the scale was more limited. Mrs. Candour, Mrs. Malaprop, Sir Benjamin Backbite and the brothers Surface 585 were already there. The standards of con-266 duct, the ideals of honor were not essentially

A generation ago Sir Benjamin bowed and danced and supped at Mrs. Maiaprop's ball with all the gay world of that time, which is now in wigs, caps, turbans, or heaven; and the next day, dining with Mrs. Candour, Sir Benjamin told, with infinite relish and to the great amusement of the table, the story of his hostess' verbal trips and stumbles. THE COACH PARADE,

The gray-beards who drive out to see the coach parade, and recall the days, before the ocean drive, when the rocks beyond Lify pond were a glimmering land of Beulah, may prattle of the golden age of Newport as of a happy past in which the gray-beards were born; but will they seriously contend that the age of Crossus and Midas is not the golden age of Newport!

While they are gossiping, the coaches approach. They have been through the town side is nailed fast to the box, while a curved, and are driving out by the fort road and as nickel plated iron bar, which runs into the and are driving out by the Fort road, and as they appear the vast throng of carriages which have driven out to meet them pull to the side of the road to allow a free course. A published of spectators awaiting a festel are. multitude of spectators awaiting a festal pro-cession, which at last is coming, naturally suggests applause. But there is profound si-There is no cheer for every spectator to catch up and pass on. is surveyed with equal gravity. The next perhaps will strike a spark of applause. But perhaps will strike a spark of applanse. But the next passes deliberately amid a silence profound. One friend, perhaps, in the state-pageant which is kindly displayed gratis for the passenger and Ticket agent, 157 N. Main St., Wichita, Kan. trians and the nurses. They sit and stroll and stare at their case while the gay play proceeds before their eyes. Nowhere more constantly than in the summer Newport does the remark of the little child watching the march of the soldiers recur-"Mamma, how ed they are to make such a show!"-George William Curtis in Harper's Magazine.

A Change for the Newsbey. Selling newspapers is not what it used to be, and the average newsboy has to get up and hump if he expects to make both ends meet. One cause for this is that local newsdealers sell a larger number of newspapers over the counter than they formerly did. and the other cause is the fact that a large number of women, especially el-600 derly ones, have entered the trade, and you occasionally find a full grown man selling papers. Those women can be seen on all the prominent cor acrs crying their papers and thrusting them in the faces of the people. They have got most of the best corners and appear to be determined to hold on to them. We do not begrudge their nickels, although they are fast getting the best of the trade.—Newsboy in St.

The empress ordered some of the crown dismonds to be mounted for her ordinary wear. Many of them had a history attached to them. Far out at sea the white sails flash, and the summer surf breaks gently along the moreur for cheering has not yet arrived. Indeed, it does not arrive before the pageant has passed and the reviewing carriages are turning and following on in its wake. It is truly a solemn function. Graybeard recalls nothing like it for multitude and display in the old drives on "beach days" along the beach in what he calls the golden age. But does he doubt that old Newport would have done it gladiy if it could have done it?

If the ghost of Heliogabalus haunts the villa'd shore, it is with no hope of resuming the imperial crown. His court merely makes a pretry summer spectacle when the opera ends.
